III. Development Strategy for the Future

The development strategy of the Company in 2013 is still aimed at increasing the market share in the local market for funeral and burial services. Governed by the regulations of the government, and exposed to competition in the industry, the development of products and services will have the following changes:

- (1) The rise of environmental protection: the aging population in society has been on the rise over the years. The cemeteries public use will be fully consumed very shortly. To avoid the living and the deceased competing for land, the Ministry of Interior urges the public to support the policy of the government in advocating burial trees, cremation, burial at sea, or natural burial methods. Currently, there are 13 public cemeteries in Taiwan offer the tree burial or dispersion of ashes and they have provided services for more than 4,000 deceased. There were also more than 600 deceased people buried at sea. It takes time to change the mindsets of people, and additional effort is required in educating and encouraging people in accepting new forms of burial. In the advent of these changes, Lungyen has to prepare and align itself in order to create a win-win situation for customers, the government, and the Company.
- (2) Changes in funeral services: the proposal for the establishment of special funeral service zones in different districts was abandoned. As such, cremation of bodies is seriously backed up. To deal with the problem, the government of New Taipei adopted the practice of "direct burial" from Japan, where the families of the deceased are encouraged cremating the bodies of the deceased before arranging the funeral service. This solution helps to solve the problems of fully-booked morgues and related sanitation problems. It also alleviates pressure on relatives when picking a date for cremation and arranging space at funeral homes. This reform is not mandatory, but is being encouraged. As the funeral and burial service sector moves toward the habit of environmental protection and frugality, Lungyen being the leader in the industry will encourage customers to practice direct cremation of bodies and then arrange for the funeral later. The Company will be the pioneer in setting up these kinds of facilities in different areas of Taiwan to make it convenient for customers in arranging funerals in relevant locations.
- (3) Globalization and professionalism: the prosperous development of the Internet allows for the rapid and frequent flow of information. The concept of the global village has been firmly developed among people. As such, it is pressing for the Company to satisfy the needs of customers of different ethnic groups and different religions in order to enhance the corporate image of the Company. Therefore, the Company will intensify its visits and exchanges with other countries to make services available for different cultural and religious backgrounds. With the joint efforts of the government, academia, and the big funeral and burial service providers, people engaging in funeral services can receive systematic and professional training with proper national licensing. This new system will replace the hereditary system from the old days and makes improvements to the service content.

(4) Transparency and the public: customer-orientation has been fully developed in different sectors of the consumer market. Naturally, the funeral and burial service sector is no exception. In the future, the ceremonial process of the funeral, the content of the service, the items supplied, the scene layout, and itemized service bills will offer transparency and public accountability in order to meet the strong demands of customers.

A number of social problems have surfaced in Taiwan, including the rise in the ageing population and the low birth rate. The Company has taken every opportunity to develop the burial service market and has emerged as the leader in living deeds, ceremonial services, and the sale of columbarium space. We do our best in all services with a view to extending them to all corners of the ethnic Chinese market.

IV. The effect of competition, the legal environment and the macroeconomic situation

The competent authority of the country has already established an effective code governing the funeral and burial service industry and has issued related regulations for protecting consumers. These measures have regulated the funeral and burial service providers and help to screen out poor performers in the industry. Lungyen has always maintained the principle of running its business lawfully. These regulations simply protect the Company in this regard.

Funeral and burial services are a need of all people and thus sales performance has not been affected by economic cycles. In the future, the Company will continue to live up to the principles of professionalism, integrity and kindness in business, and will enhance its operating performance, reinforce the foundations of its operation, and thus perform even better. In so doing, the Company shall optimize shareholders' equity, contribute to the prosperity of society, and serve as a contributor to national economic development.

May I express my gratitude to all shareholders for their support in the previous year, and kindly ask for your further support and encouragement in the future. Thank you very much.
